J. C. Hodge departed last Friday for Woodward for an indefinite time.

The entertainment given by the Beaver school Saturday night was a grand success. The bright and able manner in which each delivered their part showed that both teacher and scholars have labored earnestly throughout the term.

On Wednesday of this week, Mr. Groves, headboy of the Beaver Hotel, was treated a surprise birthday dinner prepared by Miss Ella Cook, the head help of the house, who managed the whole affair so completely that when Mrs. Groves entered the dining room she found a number of her lady friends seated at the table on which was spread an elegant repast, to which, it is needless to say they did justice.

Cold weather continues.

The masquerade ball to-night promises to be the grandest affair of the season.

Did you get a valentine?

Today the last word has been written upon the scroll of our school year and Time has placed it among the many other records that fill his store house. The year has gone, or rather, the year has become our own forever; nothing can take away from us its pleasant memories, and the help and inspiration we have received.

For five short months we have met together daily, in all kinds of weather and under no few discouragements, with one object in view—that we might be better fitted to take our places among the world of busy men and women, for all must be workers in this beautiful world of ours. There is no premium on idleness, and earnest, honest, hopeful work is the sure road to peace and happiness.

We have chosen for our motto 'Be Noble', and we have learned that the true nobility lies in doing the duty which is nearest us to it to sweep a room or prepare a history lesson.

This is a time for thought. We meet to-night perhaps for the last time, tomorrow our pathways may lead us apart, and this evening we bid farewell to our schoolmates, with whom we have had so many pleasant times, and also to our dear teacher, we know she has labored long and earnestly with us.

There is always a feeling of sadness connected with the words, "for the last time." Is there one among you all who has not uttered them? It is one of the strange contradictions of our human nature that we are even sorry to part with things that we do not seem to care for. Those who hail with delight the prospect of leaving forever our Queen of Counties (Beaver) will feel regret as they take their last look over her sunny valley.

Good bye, or God be with you; words that have been breathed for centuries alike by kindred and strangers; by those who part for a week or a day and by those who part until eternity.

Mrs. Healy is here and has accepted a position in the Land Office, where she is transcribing the field notes. Society here gains much by her presence and extends a warm welcome.—Woodward.
